The sphenoid bone is called the keystone of the cranial floor because it articulates with all other cranial bones, holding them together.